Daring Girl, Without Her Parents' Permission, Takes Flight in Aeroplane and Isn't a Bit Excited

Miss Gertrude Titus, of Helena, Mont., Who Is Visiting Mrs. Belle Mahar, of the Powhatan, Has Soared Higher in Aeroplane Than Any Other Unlicensed Woman Flier of the World.

Prominent among the visitors in Washington last week was Miss Gertrude Titus, of Helena, Mont., who holds the honor of having made the highest flight, in an aeroplane of any woman in the world, other than licensed women aviators. Miss Titus' flight was made recently at Denver, Colo., in a Curtiss biplane, as the guest and passenger of T. T. Maroney, a well known exhibitor. Miss Titus also was the first woman passenger ever carried by Mr. Maroney.

Miss Titus, the pretty, young, and winsome daughter of Court T. Titus, smelter king of Montana, and niece of Clinion T. Brainard, New York and Washington, editor and publisher, is a

So accustomed is the young woman to the sensations of "flying," gained by mocking the speed laws of cities and countries in her big forty horsepower automobile and on the back of her favorite broncho, that during the flight she nonchantly pressed the bulb that snapped a picture of herself and the svistor.

itecounting the experience, Miss Titus said that she became interested in the aeroplane after she met Mr. Maroney and the intimate details of the craft had been explained to her. The desire had been explained to her. and been explained to her. The desire to ride in the air grew gradually, but every request to her parents to be per-mitted to go up met with a stern re-fusal, and it was only by strategy that she finally accomplished her purpose.

Drove Car 2,000 Miles.

Some idea of the ability of Miss Titus as an automobile driver can be gained from the fact that recently, with three other women as passengers, she drove her car from Helena, Mont. to Denver, Colo., and return, a distance of more than 2,000 miles. On the trip to Denver than 2,000 miles. On the trip to Denver she had more than a dozen blow-outs and punctures. All repairs, including change of tires, jacking up of the ma-chine, and pumping of air, she accom-plished without assistance. and she was called on for assistance by the aviator. Together they took the machine down piece by piece and then when the troubles had been "doctored" put it back together again. This personal touch only added to the desire to feel the sensations of riding above the clouds and after much persuasion Miss Titus gained the consent of Maroney to be taken up.

A photographer in the large crowd that had gathered sensed the value of the eccurrences and attached a camera to the end of one of the planes, placing the bulb in the hands of Miss Titus. Pictures of the trip also were taken by a cinemetagraph machine and now are attracting much attention in the "movies" of the West.

Dressed in a great coat which covered a coatume of serge, the daughter of the West climbed into the seat beside Maroneyf without the flicker of an eyebash was to enter the realms of the altrought of the machine and powed at the consent of the bulb."

Miss Titus is constantly looking forward to the time when she will have an opportunity to repeat the experience, and if her parents would only consent, she would purchase a machine for her own use.

Mr. Titus was on a train rushing from Philadelphia to New York to complete a big mining deal when the picture of his daughter sitting in an aeroplane high above the ground flashing from the front page of a newspaper gave the first inmage to a place where an axle could be secured. Without hesitation the young woman started back as soon as the axle could be tied on the back of the horse. The requirity and wired his daughter not to dare the performance.
